INTRODUCTION

Community development is a process where people are united with those of governmental authorities to improve the economic, social, and cultural conditions of communities and communities are integrated into the life of the nation enabling them to contribute fully to national progress (United Nations, 1999). Haines (2007) (Phillips and Pittman, 2009) said that "community development is defined as a planned effort to produce assets that increase the capacity of residents to improve their quality of life". Meanwhile, Huraerah (2011) said that "community development is a method of social work that aims to improve people’s lives by involving the community in the whole process of activities. Working with the people and to help people to help themselves are the main principles in applying this method”.

Social work that is more suitable for practice in developing countries is social work in dealing with socio-economic problems. This is because the problems experienced by people in developing countries, including Indonesia, are generally more socio-economic problems than psychological problems. Thus, as an alternative development-oriented social work has been developed. Social work like this is more suitable for developing countries that are carrying out development efforts (Huraerah, 2021). Midgley (Huraerah, 2011) said “if social work is to survive as a profession, it needs to transcend its narrow concern with remedial practice and promote activities that make a positive contribution to social well-being”.

Rothman (1995) also identifies three models of community organization and macro practice. Originally developed in 1970, Rothman’s three models of community practice have probably been one of the most influential conceptualizations of macro social work practice. Although the models are presented as distinct approaches to macro practice, in reality they are generally "mixed and phased" in order to develop a comprehensive plan of action or organizing paradigm for macro practice. Three models of community organization and macro practice are locality development (bottom-up), social planning (top-down) and social action (inside-out).

In Ciater District there are various potential local resources, such as ecotourism in the Banceuy traditional village, cooperatives and Small and Medium-Sized Enterprises (SMEs), processed food products in Darmaga Village, Pasanggrahan, Banceuy traditional village, Sanca village. Banceuy traditional village tourism object with cultural, traditional, spiritual, agro, and nature tour packages. The Sanca Village community is a community that still preserves buhun values (custom, culture, spirituality) and nature.

In the community development based on local resources, be guaranteed the sustainability of development ideas that are productive, creative, and innovative. The success of this community development lies in intelligence in managing public awareness using various potential local resources including the use of indigenous knowledge-based technology. The process of community empowerment is a deliberate effort to facilitate local communities in planning, deciding, and managing local resources are owned through collective action and networking so that in the end they have the ability and independence in economic, ecological, and social, so that need appropriate strategies to be succeed (Meirinawati, Prabawati, & Pradana, 2017).

Local culture is a local resource that has an important role in community development. Adedokun (2020) said that culture has been defined in various ways by various authors and people. Culture is simply defined as the entire way of life of a group of people such as their values, norms, rules and regulations and their standard of behavior. William (2004) believes that local culture is indispensable to community development because culture deals with ways of life of the people and power culture in each territory and community as they hinder or enhance development. The import here is that as good as local culture is in issues of development, when interspersed with power culture (which is also an aspect of culture) in an unfavourable way, it could hinder development but when put to good use, development is enhanced. He further explains that viewing culture as either enhancing development or being a constraint to local development depends on the ways in which ethnic, gender, race, and other cultural identities impact on people’s capacity to change their lives and communities.

Power culture is a very important aspect of culture in relation to community development because community development is a democratic process in which every community member must participate in their social, economic, cultural, and political issues. However, in a situation where leaders carry and invest power in themselves, even though cultural norms and values are well respected by members of community, participation in community development will be difficult. Thus, autocratic leadership does not give way for effective practice of culture in ways that will lead to development. When power is invested in an individual or particular groups of people at the expense of community members, it may lead to misuse of powers leading to situations where some members wield their powers and privileges and other community members are denied the rights and access to taking part in development process as they lack access to community resources and their voices are kept to the background.

The purposes of study are to describe factors affecting local culture and local culture-based community development. Local culture in Ciator Regency, Subang Regency, West Java needs to be developed so that it has great benefits for improving people’s living standards. Thus, it is important to conduct research on community development based on local culture. This research can produce a novelty about the local culture-based community development.

METHOD

This study uses a qualitative descriptive research method with a case study approach. Creswell (2010) said that “researchers carry out careful research of a program, event, activity, process, or group of individuals with cases limited by time and activity”. This is in line with Creswell’s statement, namely that “a case study is a research strategy in which the researcher carefully investigates a program, event, activity, process, or group of individuals.

The informant selection technique used purposive sampling. Bryman (2008) says “most sampling in qualitative research entails purposive sampling of some kind”. Informants are community leaders (religious leaders, traditional leaders), actors of SMEs (Small & Medium-Sized Enterprises), tourism driving group, community development practitioners and Sanca village government officials.

Primary data collection techniques include interviews, observation, document study and focus group discussions. Meanwhile, secondary data sources were obtained through searching various references such as books and journals. The validity of the data using triangulation of sources and data analysis techniques using the analysis model of Miles & Huberman (1994) through data reduction, data display and conclusion/verification.

Data reduction refers to the process of selecting, focusing, simplifying, abstracting, and transforming the data that appear in writing-up field notes or transcriptions. Generically, a display is an organized, compressed assembly of information that permits conclusion drawing and action. From the start of data collection, the qualitative analyst is beginning to decide what things mean -- is noting regularities, patterns, explanations, possible configurations, causal flows, and propositions (Miles & Huberman, 1994). Meanwhile, detailed data analysis uses manual coding. The coding manual consists of open coding, axial coding, and selective coding (Saldana, 2009).

Gradually the wider community began to hear various local wisdom and arts at the Banceuy Traditional Village. In addition, the majority of visitors who arrived there came from academics and figures. There are many fields that want to be further improved and developed, such as education in agriculture, plantations and tourism."

Local wisdom is important for a country because it can function as a guardian of natural resources, and become a source of knowledge about the past as well as in agriculture. Local wisdom is very important to be preserved in a society to maintain a balance with the environment and at the same time to be able to preserve the environment. The community must recognize and understand the... importance of local wisdom so that their culture is not easily mixed with the new culture that enters.

Eco-tourism

Examples of forms of mutual cooperation are community service to build houses, community service to make roads and community service to clean the environment.

Culture Tourism

Informant “o” said that:

“Banceuy elevates culture as a strength in tourism because they want to have something different from other regions. Don't let people from outside Subang only see nature, but also, they are curious about the existing cultures.”

Tourist visitors can get art treats, traditional ceremonies and cultural attractions of Subang. Many students and college students come from various cities to spend a few days staying at people’s houses that are used as homestays. Besides being able to enjoy and have activities in the open, visitors can also enjoy arts, traditional ceremonies and cultural attractions typical of Banceuy. At night they usually could hear legends that had almost been forgotten.

Initially, Banceuy was left abandoned after the tourist facilities there caught fire. In 2012-2013 the mountain mineral water company in Subang carried out community-based conservation activities with reforestation and agroforestry approaches to make the Banceuy village beautiful again. Since 2016 the Subang drinking water company has collaborated with the local community and various other related parties to innovate to develop this Banceuy village into a tourist village. Starting with empowering the community’s capacity to be able to manage this Banceuy village into a tourist village. Then followed up with various trainings, including improving event management skills, hospitality, agro-tourism management, digital content skills, and training on product development of micro and small and medium enterprises scale.

Local culture as a fundamental component of community life shapes the unique character, needs and concerns of individuals in communities. Culture and attachment to it can thus be used as a motivating factor in promoting community development and this can serve as a tool for policy makers and other interested groups in encouraging development at the local level (Adebola, Modupe, & Olufunke, 2022). Culture can be perceived as representing both the means and ends of development. Therefore, by emphasizing the wealth and diversity of people’s cultural heritage, communities would be able to develop activities that enhance social and economic wellbeing of their communities. (Adeokun, 2020). When community development is approached from the cultural point of view, all areas needing development will be touched bearing in mind that culture deals with the total way of life of people thus leading to the use of participatory approach for development (Adebola, Modupe, & Olufunke, 2022).
Collaboration between various parties, including government, academia, industry, and the local community to initiate the development of local culture (Permana, Dewanti, & Apriliani, 2020). Thus, to develop local culture, collaboration between stakeholders is needed, namely the government, academia, industry, and local communities. Without this cooperation, local culture is difficult to develop properly.

Collaboration that is built with linkages between actors in the pentahelix model, starts from the planning stages of sustainable tourism development. The role of each actor is to always try to do their best for the development of tourism that has an impact on society and nature. The involvement of indigenous peoples through Indigenous Peoples’ Institutions (Lembaga Masyarakat Adat), is an effort to maintain local wisdom that has grown and is rooted in the local community. Optimizing pentahelix in tourism development based on local wisdom, can be done by increasing coordination and collaboration among regional actors, strengthening institutional capacity for offices and technical institutions that have a role in the development and promotion of tourism, culture, and the arts in Merauke Regency (Permana, Dewanti, & Apriliani, 2020).

CONCLUSION

Local culture is an important aspect in community development. The main factors influencing local culture at Banceuy, Sanca Village, Ciater District, Subang Regency, West Java Province are geography, natural charm, history, and economy. Meanwhile, the local culture for community development are ritual, art, environmental tourism, mutual cooperation, and cultural tourism. Local culture can be a driving force in community development and should be considered in making development policies in the region. Local culture is a community cultural heritage that can support the community's economy. Local culture can be used as a participatory approach in community development.
