We confirm that this work is original, has not been published in any journal, or is not under submission or consideration in any other journal. This paper reports on a study of the design of a developmental training program based on the competency needs of Islamic school teachers integrated with the pesantren system in Indonesia. The training program's design emphasizes the ability to internalize religious ethical value messages related to energy-saving learning. This paper's publication in the TARBIYA: Journal of Education in Muslim Society holds significant relevance in career development and teacher training.

The contribution of knowledge that we discuss in this article is related to the design of energy-saving training programs in accordance with the characteristics of national educational institutions and religious education in Indonesia, namely energy-saving training based on religious ethical values. Our research fills the void left by previous research, which solely concentrated on designing energy-saving curriculum and training syllabi, focusing on building understanding, attitudes, and behaviors without linking them to religious values. We have no conflict of interest with any party in this research.

Thank you so much for considering this manuscript

Yours sincerely,

Rohmatulloh
